Covid-19 Monoclonal Outpatient Treatment

Both monoclonal antibody therapy and oral antiviral treatment reduce the likelihood of hospitalization and death. The objective is that these treatments will stimulate the patient's immune system to block the SARS-CoV-2 virus from entering cells in your body and limit the amount of the virus within your body. This means you may have milder symptoms and may decrease the likelihood of you needing to stay in the hospital.

Individuals who are at high risk for hospitalization and severe COVID-19 symptoms include individuals who are pregnant or over 65 and those with:

- Chronic kidney disease
- Heart or lung disease
- Obesity or overweight (Body Mass Index of 25 or greater)
- Diabetes
- Conditions or treatments that suppress the immune system

Those interested in receiving Monoclonal treatment should contact their primary healthcare provider to determine if they are eligible.

Those without access to a primary care provider may contact:
